They call it a New Orleans gin fizz in New York, but it's not. At least, it's not the fizz which is designed by old man Ramos, just across the street from the St. Charlea, where the Giants stay. Other artists are mostly in the retail line, but Ramos turns out many score of masterpieces every day. Almost a dozen pupils work under his direction in his studio, and it may be that a chief pourer of even a second assistant shaker will one day develop into a fitting successor for the master. The purchaser of a Romas fizz ought to face Meeca and drink while kneeling on the bar rail, but as often as not he takes two long gulps and says, "Very fair," Art has a mighty tough time in this country.

Harry Hempstead, of the Giants, arrived to-day and will endeavor to relieve John B. Foster, who is all but invested by the bridge players.

The runners on first and third twice threatened the double steal, and once the man on first would not have been able to scramble back to his starting point, after a good throw to second by Neyers, if Merkle had not ambled far keyer found the bag.

showed under the veneer of big league education. It was a source of great amusement to the crowd, but painful to Jack Dunn, when Joe Schultz foxed the experienced Neal Ball in most signal fashion in the second inning. Ball is still basking in the glory of his triple play made on the eld Hill Top grounds in New York some ten years ago, but he will never think of his experience with Schultz without a burning blush. The Superbas were in the midst of a big inning when Schultz singled to centre field. George Cutshaw then came up and rolled one down to Ball, and, since Kellog covered second, a double play should have been made. Ball, however, ran after Schultz, who stopped and fell down. Ball then hurled to first without the formality of tagging the fallen runner, and Joe at once leaped up and made the midway. He went further, too, for Al McInnis, brother of Jack, of the Athletics, made a throw of Homeric proportions. Joe scored when Hummel singled. Otto Miller pulled a skull play in the fourth inning that gave his team a run. KEEPING AN EYE ON JACK JOHNSON

WHO ARE STARVING

The Big Fight.

("Thousands of troops in the European trenches have been waiting eagerly to hear the result of the big fight between Johnson and Willard."-

> Above their heads the shrapnel shricked Its blood-red song of hate; The 12-inch guns rang down the field The anthem of their fate; Blood-clotted in the stinking trench Across the livid night, Between the crashing of the guns They talked about-The Fight.

They stood among the Million Dead Beneath the rotting loam; But no one dreamed of peace again-And no one talked of home; But where the blood of thousands left A carmine trail of blight, They spoke of jabs and uppercuts And talked about-The Fight.

Between their trenches in the mud The disappearing dead Showed here a hand and there a foot And there a mangled head; And so with blood and bone and skull On through the waning light They sowed their Crop of Death, but still They talked about-The Fight.

The White Hope has been avenged at last. In the run of no game since the early golfers scrambled up the Bunkers of Babel has any sportive Margaret C. class been so pitilessly riddled with ridicule and contempt and scorn.

And yet in the wake of the Flynns, the Carl Morrises, the Gunboat Smiths, the McCartys and the Pelkys comes a mighty hunk of supposedly untrained flesh and lifts the term from the mire back into glory.

Willard's victory shows again the futility of the Dope at certain stages along the march. He was twenty-six years old before he ever began to fight. And in place of spending a year before the big test in hard preparation over the competitive route ne met no lighter of any consequence or skill. He went at the entire proposition backwards-but when the time came he had too much in weight of physical power to be beaten by a fading fighter who had drifted from his prime.
